Creative Coding

Cultural Event 1: DU Arcade

The first cultural event that I went to this quarter involving digital media and creativity with coding was the DU Arcade. It was a really cool event held in Shwayder Art Building where game developers from all over Colorado could show off the games that they had created. I honestly was surprised at how big of a thing it turned out to be, there were a ton of games from a large range of developers. There were some simple app-like games, really interesting and well-designed platformers and really everything in between. Probably the most established game development company that was there was Serenity Forge. They are a game development company based in Boulder and they had 3 really cool games that they had created. Here is a picture in front of one of the games that was more design and story based, I forget the name, but the designs in the game were well made.
